Richard Hackel – Photographer
Chebeague Island Landscape Photography

“By returning to the same locations on the island, my aim is to build a body of work that will show a history of transitions and stability.”

I have been photographing the landscape on Chebeague since 2000 when I began visiting the island for a short two weeks in the summer. That number has slowly increased over the years, and I now live year-round on Chebeague and make photographs all year long.

I am interested in the effects of time and how some things change and some do not. I am lucky to have the beautiful scenery of Chebeague Island to work with. My hope is to create images that let people see the landscape in a new way and to appreciate a viewpoint they may have initially missed.

In my lecture I will show some of my early work and how that has led up to the work I do today.
